Hi Jim

It has been a long time since we have spoken, but I have some knowledge from some prior experiences that I think you need to know. This pot issue can blow up in your face real easy. In the beginning your office make the choice of treating pot as a agricultural product, and let growers go for it. 10 years ago I was a part of and witnessed what had happened when 2 dairies and a feedlot was built. This happened at Connell. Part of Washington state protocol for allowing a dairy to be built in a chosen location is the locals, neighbors, get to have a say in weather or not they want the dairy. Their is a lot of smell and a lot of truck traffic that comes with a dairy. The first dairy was proposed to be built in a semi remote location. the closest neighbor was miles away. It was passed and was built and in operation today. The second was proposed to be built in a location that had allot higher people population and it was voted down and never was built. The locals had the choice if they were willing to put with smell and truck traffic or not. This is where I am very upset. I was not given that choice. Putting up with smell from green acres was crammed down my throat and I did get to have a say. When my rights get violated I have a tenancy to get very PISSED OFF. The right to have a say so in the air that I breathe I would bet violates a clean air act. If this was not the case why would the dairies have to go through all of these steps. Has their been any scientific studies on breathing the foul Oder. none that I am aware of. I do know the use of pot in children will hamper the growth of their brain. Will smelling the residual Oder of a pot farm do the same? Again no scientific study. Pot is not a agricultural product. It does nothing to feed America. The 2 uses of it is for medical and the other is for recreational use. All these pot farms do is take away from the productive base of land that our nation needs to feed its self. That base gets smaller every day. What is best for every body is not being considered here. After reading the article in the Chronicle about the last meeting your office had with the public. One thing I see is the people who are pro pot are a bunch of self centered individuals who care nothing for the public and care only for them selves. All they want to do is make a lot of money and do nothing for the county. Larry at Omak feed, I have a lot of respect for that man. The community supports him and he does what he can do to help support the community. What ever your office decides to do about these pot farms you had better think it through thoroughly. Remember you have the authority to stop it all together. My self and a few people I know have been discussing the possibilities of going to a federal judge to put a stop to growing pot in Washington until a scientific study can be done on the health affects on breathing the Oder.

I do hope that this letter will help you
